AN AMERICAN SPEECH.

Goodwin of the Salt Lake Tribune, makes a good point in the following:

The speech made by President Cleveland in Chicago has many unusually fine sentences, but some most turgid ones, and there are two singular omissions in it. In the first place, the assumption running all through is that it is a purely American show which we ask the world to look on and admire, and, second, not one reference was made to old Christopher, or the fact that the United States was making this exhibition in honor of the achievement of the Italian in bringing the existence of this New World to the knowledge of man. In the closing words he does condescend to mention "our guests from other lands," and to say that, "we co-operate in the inauguration of the enterprise devoted to human enlightenment; and in the undertaking we here enter upon, we exemplify in the noblest sense the brotherhood of nations." But the whole burden of the speech was that it is an American show, and that we didn't give a cent for the outside world and point to the achievements we here exhibit, asking no allowance on the score of youth for the enthusiasm with which we contemplate our work, or the intensified warmth of the greeting we extend to those who have come from foreign lands to illustrate with us the growth and progress of human endeavor in the direction of higher civilization." It is decidedly an American speech, and a patriotic speech, but the undertone running through it all is that we do not care a cent for the outside world and that it is mostly our show.

If we are to have the free coinage of silver, as we had from the beginning of the republic until the year 1873, it must be brought about by the united efforts of the States and Territories west of the Mississippi river. New York, influenced, if not corrupted by British gold monometalism, cannot be counted on to aid in the rehabilitation of silver, and the entire East is disposed to follow New York's lead. We are glad to see that the next meeting of the trans-Mississippi congress is to be held in this city. It is only the due of the metropolis of the Pacific coast to be the meeting place of such an important and influential body, and it is to be hoped that by the next meeting of the congress not only the United States but continental Europe will have thrown off the British shackles, and will be ready to recognize silver as a true money metal, not merely an article of commerce.—S. F. Chronicle.

Wholesale Murder.

Dennison, Texas, May 6.—Sensational developments are coming up in the Carlisle-Luttrell murder case at Sherman. The news became current that Governor Hogg had written to Judge Brown for the particulars in Charles Luttrell's case, as a pardon had been applied for and he wished to thoroughly investigate the case. It is said that Luttrell has divulged information concerning the terrible butchery of a woman here last Spring that will probably secure his reprieve, or possibly, his pardon in full. The exact confession cannot be had, but it is said that since 1888, James M. Brown, John Carlisle and friends had killed 248 men in order to kill the testimony against them in a murder case.

James M. Brown in 1878 became involved in a quarrel with a stable hand and killed him. John Carlisle was induced to kill another man named Sparks Tom Sharman, their last victim, was an eye witness. There were many others besides strong circumstantial witnesses. Brown and Carlisle, being wealthy, started in to kill the evidence against them, and Luttrell's startling confession is but a glimpse of the awful reality of this unparalleled series of crimes that cost 248 men their lives and the perpetrators millions of dollars.

Luttrell would not give the names of the victims. He said that he did not know them all, but they would be forthcoming in every instance of the killing of the gang. Every eye-witness was shadowed and killed sooner or later and all the strong circumstantial witnesses were killed by hired murderers and the officers dare not interfere, if they regarded their lives.
